On Petitions for Writs of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Tax Court of Puerto Rico (R. 29-39) and the opinion of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico (R. 45-55) are contained in the record in English translation, and are not yet reported. The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals (R. 99-106) is reported at 166 F. 2d 966. The additional opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals on petition for rehearing (omitted from the record by inadvertence) is printed in Appendix B, infra, pp. 21-24, and is reported at 166 F. 2d 970.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals was entered on February 27, 1948. (R. 106.) The order of the Circuit Court of Appeals denying taxpayers' petition for rehearing was entered on April 9, 1948 (R. 135-136), and the order denying taxpayers' second petition for rehearing was entered on April 23, 1948 (R. 145). The petitions for writs of certiorari were filed on July 9, 1948. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under Section 240 (a) of the Judicial Code, as amended by the Act of February 13, 1925.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the court below was correct in ruling that the decision of the insular Supreme Court was not manifestly erroneous in holding that taxpayers had allowed to lapse all such rights as may have been granted to them against the Treasurer of Puerto Rico under the controlling local statutes for refund of the insular excise taxes involved.
2. Whether the court below was correct in holding that the insular Supreme Court had not in later cases in effect repudiated its interpretation of the applicable local statutes made in the instant cases.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The statutes involved are set forth in Appendix A, infra, pp. 13-20.

STATEMENT

Taxpayers appealed to the court below from the respective judgments of the insular Supreme Court (R. 56, 89) affirming decisions rendered in each of the instant cases by the insular Tax Court (R. 39, 88), dismissing each taxpayer's complaint for refund of excise taxes alleged to have been unlawfully collected (R. 18-27, 75-85). Taxpayer, A. J. Tristani Suers., Inc. (usually referred to below as "Tristani"), claimed refund of taxes in the amount of $425,623.70 (R. 27), and taxpayer, R. Santaella & Brother, Inc. (usually referred to below as "Santaella"), of taxes in the amount of $857,782.73 (R. 84).

In both the insular Tax Court and the insular Supreme Court the case of taxpayer Tristani (No. 144) was decided upon the opinions rendered in those courts in the companion case of taxpayer Santaella (No. 145). Since the two cases arose on substantially similar facts and presented identical questions of law, they were heard together on the appeal to the court below, submitted on a single brief (R. 100), and single opinions were rendered in both, affirming the insular Supreme Court (R.

99-106) and denying petition for rehearing (Appendix B, infra, pp. 21-24).

In the Santaella case the insular Supreme Court stated the facts as follows, based upon the allegations of that taxpayer's complaint in the Tax Court (R. 45-47):

Taxpayer during the period from June 21, 1939, to October 13, 1942, imported cigarettes from the United States on which the Treasurer of Puerto Rico levied and collected the additional tax provided by laws of Puerto Rico, Act No. 22, approved June 18, 1939 (amended by Act No. 149, approved May 6, 1940) and Act No. 25, approved December 4, 1942. Taxes thus paid amounted to $857,782.73. (R. 45.) During the part of this period ending November 20, 1941, out of this total sum taxpayer paid these taxes under protest to the extent of $222,861.23. Beginning November 21, 1941, and up to July 7, 1942, taxpayer paid out of the total amount, also under protest, the sum of $199,880. The balance, amounting to $435,121.50, was paid, without protest, the last payment having been made on October 13, 1942. (R. 48.)

Subsequently, on October 11, 1944, taxpayer Santaella, relying on the provisions of the Act approved February 12, 1904, and Act No. 169, approved May 15, 1943, requested the Treasurer to refund the total sum thus paid by it as an additional tax on cigarettes. On August 6, 1945, the Treasurer issued an administrative decision denying the refund requested. (R. 45.) On August 29, 1945, nearly three years after the date of the last payment made by taxpayer (R. 49), taxpayer took an appeal to the insular Tax Court from the Treasurer's decision (R. 45).

The Treasurer thereupon moved to dismiss the appeal to the Tax Court on the ground, among others, that the complaint filed did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. (R. 45-46.) The Tax Court dismissed the complaint, and a reconsideration having been requested and denied, taxpayer petitioned for review of the Tax Court's decision by the insular Supreme Court. (R. 46.) The insular Supreme Court ruled that taxpayer had not timely availed itself of the remedy provided by the laws in force when it paid the taxes sought to be refunded, and, on the contrary, had allowed to lapse the statutory right of action granted to it by the local law and no statute had ever thereafter been enacted reviving this lost right. Hence, the insular Supreme Court, for these and other reasons stated in its opinion (R. 45-55), affirmed the decision of the Tax Court (R. 89).

Neither of the insular courts found the facts in the Tristani case (No. 144). The Tax Court found only that the questions of fact and law which it involved were substantially the same as those raised in the Santaella case, and since the questions of law in the latter case had been decided in favor of the Treasurer, also dismissed the Tristani complaint.

(R. 39.) This order of the Tax Court was affirmed by the insular Supreme Court "for the reasons stated" in its opinion in the *Santael?*¹ case.¹ (R. 56.)

Upon taxpayers' appeal, the court below affirmed the insular Supreme Court in both cases (R. 99-106), and denied taxpayers' first and second petitions for rehearing (Appendix B, infra, pp. 21-24; R. 135-136, 145).

ARGUMENT

The "primary question" in these cases, as stated in the petitions for certiorari (p. 7), is "whether or not the Circuit Court [of Appeals] has decided an important question of local taxing law in a way openly in conflict with applicable local decisions." It may be noted at the outset that this is not one of those rare instances in which the court below has reversed the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico on an issue of local law. On the contrary, in these cases the court below merely held that the interpretation placed by the insular Supreme Court on its local tax laws (which that court characterized as a "morass" of conflicting or confusing statutes; see Appendix B, infra, p. 24) could not be regarded as manifestly erroneous. Petitioners' chief contention is that the interpretation made by the insular court in the instant cases—which concededly was followed by the court below—was repudiated in later decisions of the insular court, and that the court below, on rehearing, erroneously failed to follow the later interpretation. In our view, this contention is wholly without merit, and presents no basis for granting the petitions.

The insular legislative history in the matter of claims for refund of excise taxes illegally collected is set forth in full detail in the opinion of the court below. (R. 101-103.) From this, it appears that the status of taxpayers' claims for refund immediately prior to the enactment of Act No. 169, approved May 15, 1943 (Appendix A, infra, p. 17), establishing the insular Tax Court in place of the former Court of Tax Appeals, was as follows:

As to the payments which taxpayers had made under protest prior to November 21, 1941, their right to sue for refund under Act No. 8, approved April 19, 1927 (Appendix A, infra, p. 13), lapsed after the expiration of the one year term, computed from the date of the respective payments. As to the payments which taxpayers made under protest between November 21, 1941, and October, 1942, their right to sue for refund lapsed after thirty days from the date of the respective payments, pursuant to the amendatory provision of Act No. 17, approved November 21, 1941. (Appendix A, infra, pp. 15, 16.) Further, as to the payments which were made without protest during these periods, the right to sue for refund, under the Acts just mentioned, was lost for two reasons, failure to protest at the time of payment and lapse of time. (R. 48-49, 52-53, 103.)

In their petitions to the Treasurer for refund and in their complaints filed in the Tax Court, taxpayers purported to be proceeding solely under the provisions of Act No. 169. (R. 14, 26, 32, 74, 83, 103.) However, for the first time in the insular Supreme Court and in the court below, they invoked an alleged alternative remedy based on the Act approved February 12, 1904 (Appendix A, infra, p. 13; R. 103), providing that whenever it is found upon the application of any taxpayer satisfactory to the Treasurer of Puerto Rico, that any moneys have been improperly collected by the Treasurer, upon the approval of the Governor, the Auditor of Puerto Rico is hereby authorized to issue a settlement warrant in favor of the taxpayer for the amount of such excess of the amount improperly paid.

Taxpayers argued that since the 1904 Act contained no time limitation, application to the Treasurer for refund might be made at any time after payment of the tax; that, if the tax was illegally collected, it then became the duty of the Treasurer to make the refund judicially enforceable by writ of mandamus; that only the fifteen year time limitation in the catch-all provision of Section 1864, Civil Code of Puerto Rico (1930 ed.), was applicable to the mandamus proceeding; and finally, that Act No. 169 of May 15, 1943, substituted the remedy of a complaint in the Tax Court for the mandamus remedy allegedly theretofore available to them to compel the Treasurer to perform his purported mandatory duty under the Act of February 12, 1904. (R. 103-104.)

The insular Supreme Court and the court below rejected these contentions, holding that the 1904 Act provided only for an administrative refund and afforded no consent to suit in the courts for enforcement of a refund. (R. 47-48, 104.) See Bonet v. Yabucoa Sugar Co., 306 U. S. 505, 506, 507, 510; Braun v. United States, 8 F. Supp. 860, 864 (C. Cls.), certiorari denied, 295 U. S. 760. Hence, prior to the enactment of Act No. 169, approved May 15, 1943, taxpayers had lost all right to sue for refund under the laws in effect when the tax payments were made, and there remained only the question whether or not the insular legislature intended by Act No. 169, which for the first time conferred refund jurisdiction upon the Tax Court, to open all claims which were barred under prior laws. Both the insular Supreme Court and the court below reasoned that, in absence of explicit provision in Act No. 169, it would be unwarranted to infer that the legislature intended to revive defunct claims which had been extinguished or barred in the past by the laws in effect at the time tax payments had been made. (R. 50, 54-55, 105.) The court below considered this rule traditional with the courts of continental United States, and, in any event, a rule which the insular Supreme Court was free to adopt in the interpretation of a local act. (R. 105.) De Castro v. Board of Comm'rs, 322 U. S. 451, 455, 458-459; Bonet v. Texas Co., 308 U. S. 463, 471; Bonet v. Yabucoa Sugar Co., supra.

Taxpayers concede that the court below applied the local law in accord with the interpretation accorded it by the insular court in its decision here, but point to the later decision of the insular Supreme Court in Gerardino v. Tax Court, decided February 20, 1948 (R. 118-135), rendered one week before the decision of the instant case by the court below (R. 100, 106) (which formed the basis of taxpayers' first petition for rehearing (R. 106-118)), and assert that the Gerardino case overruled the interpretation by the insular court of the local law applied in its opinion in the instant case. However, the court below, in its opinion denying the petition for rehearing, distinguished the Gerardino case on its facts and found that the Gerardino case was in no way inconsistent with the interpretation made in the instant case. (Appendix B, infra, pp. 22-24.) In the Gerardino opinion, the insular court referred to its decision in the instant case no less than five times (R. 120, 122, 134), and in each instance either cited it with approval or distinguished it factually from the Gerardino case.

Similarly, the decision of the insular Supreme Court in Mayaguez Light, Power & Ice Co. v. Tax Court, decided March 31, 1948 (R. 139-144), upon which taxpayers based their second application for rehearing (R. 136-138), denied by the court below without opinion (R. 145), is not inconsistent with the instant case. The only point upon which the insular court passed in that case was whether the four year limitation upon applications for refunds enacted by Act No. 261, approved April 3, 1946 (Appendix A, infra, p. 19), applied retroactively to cases where taxpayers had filed their petitions in the Tax Court prior to the date of the enactment of the amendatory statute. In the Mayaguez case, the appeal was by taxpayer alone, and hence only the point raised by taxpayer was before the court. Certainly, the issue passed upon in the instant case, namely, whether Act No. 169 of 1943 was intended to revive stale and lapsed claims, was not before the insular Supreme Court and it did not rule upon it.

CONCLUSION

The decision of the court below is correct, and no question warranting further review is presented. The petitions for writs of certiorari should be denied.

APPENDIX ALaws of Puerto Rico:

Act approved February 12, 1904 (An Act for the Repayment of Taxes Improperly Collected):

SECTION 1.—Whenever it is found, either upon the application of any taxpayer satisfactory to the Treasurer of Porto Rico, or by the Auditor or Treasurer upon the revision and correction of the tax receipts, that any moneys have been collected by the Treasurer of Porto Rico improperly, or in excess of the proper amount, upon the approval of the Governor, the Auditor of Porto Rico is hereby authorized to issue a settlement warrant in favor of the taxpayer for the amount of such excess of the amount improperly paid.

Act No. 8, approved April 19, 1927:

SECTION 1.—Whenever a taxpayer believes that he should not pay any tax or part thereof, he shall, however, be obliged to pay the same in full upon request of the collector of internal revenue of his district, or of the official in charge of the collection of taxes, and shall he desire to make any claim, shall ask the said collector or the said official in charge of the collection of taxes, on making payment, to endorse the tax receipt, specifically stating whether the said protest refers to the whole or to a part of the tax paid under protest, and setting forth the exact amount protested. The said endorsement shall be signed by the taxpayer and by the collector or officer in charge of the collection of taxes.

* * * * *

SECTION 3.—A taxpayer who shall have paid under protest the whole or part of any tax may, within the term of one year from the date of payment, sue the Treasurer of Porto Rico in an insular court of competent jurisdiction, or in the District Court of the United States for Porto Rico, to secure the return of the amount protested. The Attorney General shall represent the Treasurer of Porto Rico in such suits. Upon the filing of the complaint, if it be filed in an insular court, it shall follow the procedure, conditions and requirements provided by the Code of Civil Procedure in an ordinary action. When the case is ready for trial, the court shall fix the day for the trial thereof, on petition of any of the parties, with preference to any other matter pending before it. When final decision is rendered, if favorable to the taxpayer, the Treasurer of Porto Rico shall proceed to return to him the amount directed in the decision, to be charged against any fund in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated plus interest on such amount at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum, computed from the date of the filing of the complaint in the court or on the petition of the taxpayer, the Treasurer shall credit him with the total amount to be returned, to be applied to the payment of any tax already due and unpaid or to become due in the future; Provided, That said credit may be transferred by the taxpayer, and then the Treasurer of Porto Rico shall credit it to the assignees, for all purposes of the law. Costs, expenses and attorney's fees shall be imposed in the discretion of the court in the same manner as in all other civil cases.

SECTION 4.—Any party may take an appeal in accordance with the provisions of the law for appeals in civil cases.

SECTION 5.—Any taxpayer filing a claim against the Treasurer of Porto Rico in accordance with the provisions of this Act, shall attach to the said claim the receipt for the tax paid under protest or a certified copy thereof.

Act No. 17, approved November 21, 1941:

SECTION 1.—Section 1 of Act No. 8, of April 19, 1927, entitled "An Act providing for the payment of taxes under protest; establishing a procedure to authorize the collection and return thereof; to repeal Act No. 9 of June 23, 1924, and Act No. 84, approved August 20, 1925, and for other purposes," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1.—Whenever a taxpayer believes that he should not pay any tax or part thereof, with the exception of property, inheritance, and income taxes, for the payment of which there is a specific procedure in the corresponding laws, the taxpayer shall, however, be obliged to pay the same in full upon request of the collector of internal revenue of his district or of the official in charge of the collection of taxes, and should he desire to make any claim, he shall ask the said collector or the said official in charge of the collection of taxes, on making payment, to endorse the tax receipts, specifically stating what part of the tax is paid under protest and challenged by the taxpayer and the reasons on which he grounds the protest and challenge. The said endorsement shall be signed by the taxpayer and by the collector or officer in charge of the collection of taxes."

SECTION 2.—Section 3 of the said Act No. 8 of April 19, 1927, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 3.—A taxpayer who, in accordance with this Act and the exceptions established therein, shall have paid under protest the whole or part of any tax may, within the term of thirty (30) days from the date of payment, file a sworn complaint against the Treasurer of Puerto Rico in the corresponding district court; Provided, That the complaint shall not be for an amount or on any other grounds than those alleged in his protest when making payment. The Attorney General shall represent the Treasurer of Puerto Rico in such suits. Upon the filing of the complaint, if it be filed in an insular court, it shall follow the procedure, conditions, and requirements provided by the Code of Civil Procedure in an ordinary action. When the case is ready for trial, the court shall fix the day for the trial thereof, on petition of any of the parties, with preference over any other matter pending before it. When final judgment is rendered, if favorable to the taxpayer, the Treasurer of Puerto Rico shall proceed to return to him the amount directed in the judgment, to be charged against any funds available in the public treasury, plus interest on such amount at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum, computed from the date of the filing of the complaint in the court; or on the petition of the taxpayer, the Treasurer shall credit him with the total amount to be returned, to be applied to the payment of any tax already due and unpaid or to become due in the future; Provided, That said credit may be transferred by the taxpayer, and then the Treasurer of Puerto Rico shall credit it to the assignees, for all the purposes of law. Costs, expenses, and attorney's fees shall be imposed in the discretion of the court in the same manner as in all other civil cases."

Act No. 169, approved May 15, 1943:

* * * * *

Section 3.—

All actions, remedies, or proceedings which must be substantiated before the Tax Court of Puerto Rico shall be instituted by means of a sworn complaint of the claimant person or entity, formulated by the claimant or through a duly authorized legal representative, within the 30 days following the date of the service of notice thereof by the Treasurer of Puerto Rico, in any of the following cases: (1) Assessment or reassessment of personal property, tangible or intangible, or of real property; (2) Appraisal made for inheritance tax purposes, and proper liquidation of each heir's share of the inheritance, as well as the amount of the tax payable on each inheritance tax case; (3) Liquidation or re-liquidation of the amount of the income tax, including notices of deficiencies or of any other nature; (4) Refusals to return any tax improperly paid, or paid in excess, or otherwise unlawfully collected; (5) Request for payment by the Treasurer of Puerto Rico by virtue of any excise or license taxes, or any other tax or impost not previously specified; Provided, That the period of 30 days to which this section refers shall be suspended if during said period the Treasurer is asked for a reconsideration of his decision and he grants such reconsideration, in which case, the said period of thirty days, already started to run, shall continue to be reckoned from the date on which the Treasurer serve notice of his final decision on the incident of reconsideration upon the interested party; * * *

* * * * *

SECTION 4.—The Tax Court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to take cognizance of all cases of revision of the assessment or reassessment of personal property, tangible or intangible, or of real property, and of all actions, proceedings, special or extraordinary remedies, and claims of any kind, relating to or affecting the levying, collection, payment, return, or reimbursement of all kinds of taxes, including excise and income taxes, the Victory Tax, inheritance and license taxes, and any other taxes or imposts, as well as to take cognizance of taxes improperly paid, or paid in excess, or unlawfully collected, the return of which may have been refused by the Treasurer. This jurisdiction, however, cannot be pleaded before the court by any person until there has been a proper administrative decision in the matter on the part of the Treasurer of Puerto Rico, according to law.

Act No. 10, approved March 29, 1945:

SECTION 1.—Section 1 of the Act entitled “An Act for the repayment of taxes improperly collected,” approved February 12, 1904, is hereby amended to read as follows:

“SECTION 1. Whenever it is found, either upon the application of a taxpayer to the satisfaction of the Treasurer of Puerto Rico, or upon investigation by the Auditor or Treasurer upon making the revision and correction of the tax receipts, that any moneys have been collected by the Treasurer of Puerto Rico improperly, or in excess of the proper amount, the Auditor of Puerto Rico is hereby authorized to issue a settlement warrant in favor of the taxpayer for the amount of such excess or the amount improperly paid.”

Act No. 261, approved April 3, 1946:

SECTION 1.—Section 1 of Act entitled “An Act for the repayment of taxes improperly collected," approved February 12, 1904, as amended by Act No. 10, approved March 29, 1945, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1.—Whenever it is found, either upon the application of a taxpayer to the satisfaction of the Treasurer, or upon investigation by the Auditor or Treasurer upon making the revision and correction of the tax receipts, that any moneys have been collected by the Treasurer of Puerto Rico improperly, or in excess of the proper amount, the Auditor is hereby authorized to issue, with the approval of the Treasurer, a settlement warrant in favor of the taxpayer for the amount of such excess or the amount improperly paid; Provided, That repayment of taxes improperly collected, or in excess of the proper amount, shall not be granted after four (4) years have elapsed since the payment or [sic] said taxes, unless before the expiration of the said four (4) years, the taxpayer requests in writing from the Treasurer the repayment thereof."

OPINION OF THE COURT.

On Petition for Rehearing.

April 9, 1948.

MAGRUDER, J. Appellants have filed a petition for rehearing, in which they call our attention to Gerardino v. Tax Court of Puerto Rico, decided by the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico on February 20, 1948, which was only one week before we handed down our decision in the above-entitled cases. It is claimed that in the Gerardino case the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico has given an interpretation to the applicable local statutes which in effect constitutes a repudiation of that court's reasoning, which we accepted, in the Tristani and Santaella cases.

We have examined the Gerardino opinion with care, and do not find that it in any way weakens the force of the earlier cases. Indeed, at several points in its opinion, the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico cites with approval its decision in the Tristani and Santaella cases. The crucial point in the Gerardino case, differentiating it from the earlier cases, is that Gerardino paid his tax in 1944, which was after Act 169 of 1943 had become effective. In such a case, the court concludes from the perplexing statutes that the taxpayer has two alternative remedies when the Treasurer makes demand for the payment of a tax: (1) He may make payment under protest and sue in the Tax Court for refund within thirty days after the date of the Treasurer's demand, which is the "administrative decision" required by § 4 of Act 169 to give jurisdiction to the Tax Court (see paragraph 5 of § 3 of Act 169); or (2) he may make payment, whether voluntarily or under protest, after which he may within four years of the date of payment file a petition with the Treasurer for refund, and then sue in the Tax Court within thirty days after the service of notice of the administrative decision of the Treasurer denying the refund petition (see paragraph 4 of § 3 of Act 169). In the Tristani and Santaella cases, the taxpayers had made their payments of the taxes in question before the passage of Act 169 of 1943. Their right to sue for refunds had lapsed, under the applicable acts in force prior to the passage of Act 169, for the reasons set forth at length in our opinion of February 27, 1948. This conclusion is fortified by the further comments of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico in the Gerardino case. In addition, that court specifically noted that the Gerardino case was not concerned with the point decided in the Tristani and Santaella cases, which was that Act 169 was not intended "to revive causes of action which were barred, both as to right and remedy, because the taxpayer did not avail himself in time of the remedy provided by the laws in force at the time of payment of the sums he was now claiming."

We note sympathetically the remarks of the Supreme Court of Puerto Rico at the close of its opinion in the Gerardino case, to the effect that there is obvious need for "a plain, uniform and integrated procedural statute for all tax litigation" which will eliminate the "series of elaborate booby traps" now lurking in a "morass" of conflicting or confusing statutes.

The petition for rehearing is denied.
